The Roman Baths were discovered at a depth of 16 feet below Bath's present surface level, and laid bare in 1755. Many other relics have also been discovered of the ancient Aquæ Solis which the Romans erected around the healing springs, the virtue of which is reputed to have become famous nearly 900 years B.C. The springs, of which there are three, are situated in the centre of the town, and it is calculated that they rise from a depth of 3,500 feet!
